

SD-WAN vs. MPLS

CommQuotes Helps You Figure Out Which Networking Solution Is Right for You

Your network is the backbone of your organization, and having the right management solution in place is key to meeting your business technology needs. How do you decide between SD-WAN and MPLS? With CommQuotes' long-standing provider relationships, access to the lowest possible pricing, and industry expertise and experience, we can help you make the right decision.

Data Network Services From CommQuotes

Our entrenched relationships with the industry's top connectivity and networking suppliers mean our customers get enterprise-grade MPLS and SD-WAN solutions. But what's the difference?

SD-WAN

- Eliminates network management complexity for multi-location businesses and organizations using hybrid or remote work models
- Enables easy access to cloud applications, wherever employees are
- Helps reduce costs through intelligent traffic prioritization
- Allows for use of existing and/or low-cost internet connections, which reduce cost and streamline the implementation timeline
- Installs in days rather than months
- Offers trials to prove the service works for the application
- Can layer on security natively to reduce hardware at the edge and lower costs
- Provides single pane of glass reporting and analytics
- Can be deployed in a site-to-site mesh or a hybrid private WAN depending on requirements
- Allows for direct access to public and private cloud applications

MPLS

- A better choice for large, mission-critical deployments where internet transport is seen as a risk
- Can have lower packet loss for faster application response
- Potentially more expensive and less secure than SD-WAN
- Provides true quality of service to mitigate packet loss
- A good choice for real time application traffic (VoIP, ERP, VDI, etc.)
- Guaranteed packet delivery and performance
